Conquista de la Nueva Castilla, poema eroico . . . D.155.23
Paris. Blanc & cie. 1848. xiii, (1), 211 pp. 12°.

"It is a short narrative poem, written apparently about the middle of the Sixteenth Century, by some unknown author of that period, and devoted to the glory of Francisco Pizarro, from the time when he left Panama, in 1524, to the fall of Atabalipa. It was found in the Imperial Library at Vienna, among the manuscripts there, but it seems to have been edited [by Johann Andreas Sprecher von Bernegg] with very little critical care. It does not, however, deserve more than it received. It is wholly worthless." — Ticknor's History of Spanish literature.

Phages of London 1915

The following table shows the results of the experiments conducted by Dr. W. M. Smith and his colleagues in the study of the phages of London. The table is divided into two main sections, one for the phages of London and one for the phages of the other cities. The first section, 'Phages of London', is further divided into two sub-sections, 'Phages of London 1915' and 'Phages of London 1916'. The second section, 'Phages of other cities', is divided into two sub-sections, 'Phages of other cities 1915' and 'Phages of other cities 1916'. The table shows the results of the experiments for each of these four categories, including the number of phages isolated, the number of phages that were able to infect the bacteria, and the number of phages that were able to produce a visible plaque.

1. The first of these is the fact that the data are not normally distributed. The data are skewed to the right, with a long tail of high values. This is evident from the histogram and the normal probability plot. The normal probability plot shows that the data are not normally distributed, as the points do not fall on a straight line.
